HOW RADIUM IS EXTRACTED.

In spite of the fact that radium has been so widely discussed, probably few people are acquainted with the method by which it is secured in the minute quantities that are yet available.

That the element is obtained from pitchblende is generally known, but some details of the exact process will be of interest. According to the "Lancet" operations for the extraction are commenced by crushing the pitchblende and then roasting the powder with carbonate of soda. After washing, the residue is treated with diluted sulphuric acid; then in sulphates are converted into carbonates by boiling with strong carbonate of soda. The residue contains radium sulphate, which is an exceedingly insoluble salt. The soluble sulphates are washed out, and the residue or insoluble portion is easily acted upon by hydrochloric acid, which takes out among other things, potassium and actinium. Radium sulphate remains unattacked as sulfate with some barium sulphate. The sulphates are then converted into carbonates by treatment with a boiling strong solution of carbonate of soda. The carbonate of barium and radium are next dissolved in hydrochloric acid and precipitated again as sulphates by means of sulphuric acid. The sulphates are further purified and the radium is converted into chloride, until about fifteen pounds of barium and radium chloride are obtained by adding upon one ton of crushed pitchblende.

That this mixed chloride is pure radium chloride, which is finally separated from barium by electrolysis. The crystals from the most radioactive of the solutions being selected. In this way the crystals ultimately obtained are relatively pure radium chloride of very high degree of radioactivity. Western Electrician.

COASTING WITH A "JUMPER."

As an improvement on the regular toboggan, an Englishman has invented what he calls the "jumper" for use when the snow is on the ground. It is really a sled with only one runner on which one must preserve a proper balance while going at a rapid rate down hill.

The single-runner sled is steel-shod, the runner being from one and a half to two inches in width, and the coarsening of the snow is from three to four feet long, the front being given an upward curve just behind the center of the length. It is fastened to the sled by a firmly fastened seat. The height of the seat is a purely arbitrary matter, but it will be readily seen that the higher the seat the more the skill required to balance and guide the "jumper."

Somewhat the same thing is the case with the runner, for the greater the length the harder it is to keep it going in the desired direction, as it passes over little inequalities on the track, which tend to make it swerve over. The balance is maintained by a quick movement of the hands or feet, which anticipates any impulse on the part of the "jumper" to go over to either side. A skilled coaster generally uses his feet for this purpose, and by a judicious use of his hands upon the seat keeps the sled in the desired direction. Although the track is usually a straight one, the "jumper" is able to negotiate curves just as easily, but the skill required is a long, straight, snowy stretch of hill running down till it meets the flat ice of a frozen lake, whereon the sled gradually slackens speed.
